

Evening Chat

Chief O. J. Watkins, of the city fire department with a view to the prevention of fires during the coming Christmas season has prepared a list of rules in regard to decorations, etc., which are very timely and deserving of attention.

They are as follows:

Flammable decorations should never be used. They have been the cause of much sadness and many deaths. Decorations of no kind should be used near gas jets.

Wherever possible electricity should be used for illuminating Christmas trees or for decorative purposes, and the wiring should be done by a competent electrician.

If trees are to be lighted other than by electricity, see that the children do not light or relight candles. Better no lights than run the risk of having an innocent child lose its life.

Paper, cotton or other decorations of any inflammable material should never be used. Use metallic tinsel or asbestos material.

See that trees are securely fastened to the floor so that the children cannot pull the tree over when reaching for things.

If presents are distributed from the tree, either at home or at a public entertainment, care should be taken in handling them to avoid the possibility of a fire.

Avoid mechanical toys that require alcohol or gasoline to operate them.

Never permit cotton to be used beneath trees to give the appearance of snow. Use asbestos or mineral wool; it will not burn, and give a better effect than cotton.

Matches should never be left within the reach of children. Keep them in metal boxes and out of reach.

Don't let smokers throw matches, cigars or cigarettes about in a careless manner where there is a tree.

Be constantly on the watch for anything that might cause fire. Have merriment and plenty of it, but avoid inordinance by the avoidance of carelessness.

Strive to prevent casualties, but be prepared for any emergency by having placed conveniently, fire extinguishers or buckets filled with water.

Yesterday a man of Fairmont walked into a Fairmont furniture store and asked the girl who came forward to wait on him, to see some hall racks. The girl was a new girl and was just working there that day in the place of a regular clerk who was sick. But she had studied the store's line and knew what was what.

"I want to see some Mission wood racks," the "gentleman" said and she led him toward the hall racks.

Some Mission wood racks were shown him.

"Look here," he said, "I said I wanted to see Mission wood racks didn't I? I don't call this mission wood."

"Of you mean turned oak?"

"Well, maybe that is it but I always called it Mission wood."

"No, I don't want one with a seat. Ain't you got any more than this?"

The girl then told him that the ones on the floor were the only racks the store had unless possibly there were others in the store room which she knew nothing about. She told him that if he would wait a minute for the return of the store manager from lunch, he could tell whether or not they had other racks. The man broke loose.

"Well, I think it's a pity they don't have some one here that got sense enough to show furniture to the store's customers. It's a wonder they wouldn't get clerks that knew something about what they were trying to do—gr-r-r-r how-how, etc."

"Then with very outspread aid and with never a glance to the poor trembling girl he stormed out jabbering to himself."
